Effective Communication 2

Quick briefing

Use the communication process to diagnose misunderstandings and choose a method that lets the receiver act correctly.

Know the facts

Communication process · A sender conveys a message through a channel to a receiver. Feedback gives the receiver a way to respond and clarify meaning.

Four methods · Spoken, nonverbal, written, and visual. Tone and gestures can reinforce or complicate the meaning of spoken words.

Organizational direction · Messages can move downward to subordinates, upward to leaders, or horizontally among peers.

Barriers · Language, psychological, physiological, physical, and attitudinal barriers can interfere with receiving or interpreting a message.

Practical techniques · Use active listening, clear and concise language, emotional awareness, and constructive feedback focused on the issue.

Understand the reasoning

An immediate verbal update is fast, while a written or visual aid gives people a reference they can recheck after the conversation.

A receipt acknowledgement confirms delivery. A receiver who restates the action and deadline provides evidence of understanding.

Philippine Army classroom exercise

A Philippine Army training coordinator announces a room change aloud. Two section leaders hear the new room number, but one assumes the change also delays the start.

Decision · How should the coordinator correct the misunderstanding and verify the revised instructions?

Worked analysis · State the room and start time together and update the shared schedule. Ask each section leader to restate where and when the group must report. Spoken clarification reaches the group quickly and the written schedule gives everyone the same reference.

How to practice

1 · State the required action, timing, and any important change in plain language.

2 · Choose a channel that reaches the audience and provide a reference when details must be retained.

3 · Ask the receiver to restate the action in their own words.

4 · Correct the specific misunderstanding and confirm the final shared version.

Check yourself

What role does feedback play in two-way communication? · It lets the receiver respond and lets the sender verify or clarify what was understood.

What type of barrier is unfamiliar jargon when the words can be heard clearly? · A language barrier.
